TELEHEALTH

Telehealth is the use of telecommunications and information technology to provide access to physical, mental, and behavioral health care across distance.

POLICY DEFINITIONS

Digital Health consists of online digital evaluation and management (E/M) services\(^1\) which are patient-initiated services with health care professionals. These are not real-time services. Patients initiate services through HIPAA-compliant secure platforms which allow digital communication with the health care professional. Online digital evaluation and management services are for established patients only. These services do not include nonevaluative electronic communications of test results, scheduling of appointments, or other communication that does not include evaluation and management.

Distant Site is the location of the health care professional.

Originating Site is the location of the patient.

Synchronous Telehealth is two-way, real-time interactive communication between a patient and their health care provider using technology such as interactive video/television, audio/visual secure online digital portals, and videoconferencing. Synchronous telehealth involves two collaborating sites: an “originating site” and a “distant site.” The patient is located at the originating site and the health care professional is located at the distant site.

Audio-Only Telephone Services can be delivered by using older-style “flip” phones or a traditional “land-line” phones that only support audio-based communication. Only certain services are covered using audio-only telephone services (see linked list of covered services below).

Telehealth is an umbrella term which includes digital health and synchronous two-way real-time interactive audio/visual services. It does not include store and forward services.
